Your Turn!

Hello! Are you ready for an adventure? After reading Lisa's stories and letters from her friends, it's time to get involved! You can choose one of the activities below to share your ideas, tell a story, or create something special. What will you choose? Ready to start? Here are your options:

1. Dear Friend, I Write to You…

Imagine you are one of Lisa's friends and you want to reply to one of the letters you've read. Pick the one that touched you the most and write a letter to explain how you feel, what you think about her adventure, or what you would like to do if you were with her. You can also ask questions or share your own experience that might interest her!

Tip: Be creative! Lisa loves receiving news from her friends. You can even draw something next to your letter to make it extra special!

2. Once Upon a Time…

Imagine you are on a fantastic adventure with Lisa. Where would you be? What would happen? Write a story where you and Lisa are the heroes of a grand adventure. It could be a journey to a faraway country, an encounter with mysterious animals, or an incredible discovery! Choose a setting that inspires you and let your imagination take flight.

Suggestion: You can also write about an adventure you have experienced and would like to share with Lisa — maybe a trip, a special meeting, or a funny moment.

3. Postcard!

Imagine you are in Africa or another country that fascinates you, and you want to send a postcard to Lisa or one of the other children. Draw a picture showing the place you are visiting: you could draw yourself in an African landscape, a wild animal that amazes you, or a character from one of the stories. On the back of the postcard, write a message to Lisa, explaining why you would love to be there with her and what you hope to see or discover.

Ideas for your drawing: Don't worry if you've never been to Africa! You can do some research to get ideas and immerse yourself in that world. Or you could draw a savannah with giraffes, elephants, and lions, or a small colourful village. Don't forget to include some details that you want to tell Lisa about in your postcard!

4. Group Work

(suitable for younger children too)

Let's work together to create something special! Divide into groups and imagine telling a story using images, words, and music. Each group can choose a theme from the stories we've read (for example, a trip to a faraway land, the life of animals, a traditional festival) and present it creatively, using drawings, poems, or rhymes. The result will be a fantastic group project!

Tip: Share the roles: someone can do the drawings, someone else can write the story, and someone can take care of music or sounds… and most importantly, have fun working together!

Choose one activity and let your creativity shine! Each activity will help you discover something new about yourself and the world — just like Lisa and her friends do in their stories. Have fun!
